MISSOULA--

Two innovative programs in philosophy and the humanities are included in the summer session offerings of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Montana. Both courses are taught by UM faculty members and both may be taken for three graduate or undergraduate credits.

"Problems in Philosophy: Explanation and Justification" (June 18-July 13) will ask and attempt to answer crucial questions in politics, ethics, art, and religion. The course will be taught by Dr. Albert Borgmann, professor of philosophy.

"The Family in Perspective, the Written Tradition" (July 16-August 10) will entail the writing of a document on one's own family, covering the generation of self, parents, and grandparents. Effects of social factors, such as war, depression, and work, will be stressed as well as the psychological and relational interworkings of the family. The course will be taught by Roger Dunsmore, assistant professor of humanities.

The College of Arts and Sciences will also offer summer courses in a number of other disciplines as well as other courses in philosophy.

Bulletins and applications may be obtained from the UM Center for Continuing Education and Summer Programs, Main Hall 107, University of Montana, Missoula, MT 59812 (406) 243-2900.
